Individual learning accounts and a learning bank

An assessment of the contribution such a system could make to the funding of students and provision in higher education and lifelong learning

David Robertson
Professor of Public Policy & Education
Liverpool John Moores University
and
Visiting Research Fellow
Centre of Educational Research
London School of Economics
and
Josh Hillman
Research Fellow in Education
Institute of Public Policy Research

Contents

1. Introduction
2. Individual Learning Accounts - an assessment of their potential and limitations
3. The Learning Bank - an assessment of roles and functions
4. The next steps - problems and possibilities
5. An implementation process

Acknowledgements and notes on the literature
References
Appendix A